Design to Culture

Presented by Leslie Rettinger, PhD, Presbyterian Healthcare Services

Culture can influence programs in ways that affect successful implementation and sustainment. The culture in Albuquerque, New Mexico is shaped by a unique set of characteristics that offer insight into ways to design for culture from the beginning. After attending this workshop, attendees will be able to identify ways in which culture can become a part of the program design process.

Leslie Rettinger is the manager of Customer Experience at Presbyterian Healthcare Services. She holds a MBA from Anderson Business School, and a PhD in Organizational Learning and Instructional Technology – both from University of New Mexico.
